Loch Ranza (the loch with choice anchorage) is a deep narrow indentation on the northern coast of the Isle of Arran, and, owing to its honourable mention by Scott in the "Lord of the Isles," is known as the classical district of Arran. On its shores is an old castle, roofless, otherwise well preserved which is supposed to have been a hunting-box of one of the Stuart Kings. Fordun also mentions it as a Royal Castle in 1380.

So many thanks for kind letter. We are now in this delightful place, with only a few cottages - such scenes
of kintyre & adjacent isles, but torrents of rain -
yours.
